Sister-Poem

Eyes dark as night that holds the wild sleep of her mind, she wakes, my sister, wakes.

Sybil, Prophetess,
tell of another time
of us, two loves of two lovers,

of Mother's hazel eyes
the clothespin between her teeth, of Father poised on the roof.

Over Long Island Sound
his fancy pigeons fly
breaking the dawn with their wings.

He whistles between his fingers They glide to their cote like leaves and swoop you from my dreams light as the ghosts you call.

Song for A Single Goblet

there is but one
god among
the many dreamed,
one
mate to cherish
one
self to satisfy
one
mouth to touch
this glass,
one you
upon this earth
I wish to love
One lifetime.

POP POEM

From my typewriter,
paper explodes like popcorn
words and wit
Picasso style
verse-masks
fish-eyed philosophy
the scattered limbs of stories words overflow the room slip through windows
my lawn looks snowy,
out of season
neighbors are curious
tv crews arrive
people I never met
are interviewed about my habits waded in drifts,
they are reading
while the police ponder what charges to bring
against a writer
who will not stop
writ...
